

The Simulator System

How to Practice the Art and Science of Attraction With No Risk of Rejection

By John Alanis
The King of Let 'em Come to You

Copyright Notices

© Copyright Art Of Steel, Inc.

All rights reserved. Any unauthorized transfer of license, use, sharing , reproduction or distribution of these materials by any means electronic, mechanical, or otherwise is prohibited. No portion of these materials may be reproduced in any manner whatsoever without the express written consent of the publishers.

Published under the copyright laws of the Library Of Congress Of the United States Of America by:

Art Of Steel, Inc.

4424 Gaines Ranch Loop #1035

Austin, Texas 78735

(512) 892-8839

support@womenapproachyou.com

www.JohnAlanis.com

Welcome to the Attraction Simulator System. On one hand, this system is going to be one of the shortest I've ever created- but it might be the most valuable. Oh, I could stuff it full of fluff and filler to add bulk, and I could put lots of pictures in it to make it pretty. But, I'm not really into all that. I'm into delivering information that works, and what I am about to reveal is the most valuable method I've ever discovered for practicing attraction.

On occasion, I survey my customers and subscribers. Reading over the results of my most recent survey, I noticed an interesting pattern: a LOT of men were asking if there was a way for me to create a "practice system" so they could try out all of their new skills without risking rejection.

At first glance, that sounds unrealistic—how do you "practice" without talking to a real live woman which, would obviously make it more than practice? The idea of a software system that produces female "avatars" programmed to interact with you is so far fetched as to be unrealistic, and in my mind a little creepy. Or a lot.

After reading the survey, I was just about to simply tell the guys to go out in the real world, suck it up, and talk to women until they were no longer afraid when I remember something from my past, something that helped me hone my attraction skills dramatically. I hadn't done it in quite awhile because I've been so busy meeting women in the real world, but thinking back on it, it gave me the skills to do so.

Let me tell you a quick story. Way back in 1999, a friend of mine discovered internet chat and instant messaging. ICQ had started it all, and soon enough AOL Instant Messenger was all the rage. Chat rooms sprang up, and internet dating sites started to flourish.

Now, my friend had a weakness for the ladies. He dated a lot of women, slept with a lot more, but he just couldn't get enough. He met women on the street, in the office, everywhere you could meet them, he met them. But it was never enough for him—he always wanted more.

The other thing my friend liked to do was talk. Hell, he loved to talk. Cell phones were just starting to take off, and he didn't have just one—he had two. He made a big show of always being on his cell phone, and sometimes would be talking on two at once. I have no idea who he was talking to or what about (since he never seemed to make any money), but he sure loved to talk.

One day he came over, excited about a new online tool he'd found—ICQ which stood for I Seek You. Cute. He knew I was in the marketing game, and came over to ask me if there was an application for it. I looked at it, and said it sounded like a fantastic way to waste time. He didn't like that answer, but I was certainly proven right on that count—Instant Messaging is an extraordinarily effective way to waste time.

My friend, however, was bound and determined to find some sort of use for Instant Messaging. Soon, just like his cell phones, he had two, even three, different chat programs open on his computer at once. Once I caught him chatting with two people at once, while talking on his cell phone.

I met him in 1998, and we were actually roommates in 1999 and 2000. And while the guy wasted a lot of time yammering on his cell phones and chatting on his instant messenger programs, he always found time for the ladies. A lot of time.

He started bringing home two, even three new ones a week. While none of them were going to win the Miss American Pageant, all of them were acceptably cute, fun, and sexy. Whatever flaws my friend had, he was good at meeting women.

One day he came home, bursting with excitement, telling me about a new woman he was going to meet up with. He'd been talking to her on his cell phone as he drove home from work, and wanted to show me a picture of her.

We went over to his computer, and he showed me a picture of chunky, but pleasant looking blonde. "Nice," I said. "How did you meet this one?"

He got a gleam in his eye when he told me, as if he was about to spill a secret. He was. "Remember that Instant Messenger you said was a waste of time?" he began. "Yep," I said, "and you seem to do quite well wasting a lot of time with that thing."

"Yeah, yeah, but I finally discovered a use for this thing. I use it to meet women. Lots of women, and they're pretty cute. You should try it," he said.

Now I was intrigued. At that time I hadn't yet figured attraction out, and I didn't meet nearly as many women as he did. I knew he had a trick up his sleeve, and I wanted to see it.

I asked him to show me, and his face lit up. He loved to show off, and in this case I was happy to let him...I wanted to know his secret.

He turned on his computer, fired up AOL Instant Messenger and went to an AOL chatroom, full of women. He watched for about 5 minutes to see what the conversations were about, then he chose one and Instant Messaged her. She didn't respond.

No worries, he went onto the next one. And she did respond. Not only did she respond, she sent him a picture within 2 minutes, and they were chatting away like old friends within 5. But he didn't stop there. He did the same thing with another woman, then another. Soon enough, he was talking to 4 women who'd sent him pictures within 2 minutes. Things were flying so fast he could barely keep up.

I watched him for about 15 minutes, flabbergasted. During that time, he'd met 4 women, gotten their pictures, added them to his AOL Instant Messenger contact list, and got them interested in him. I'd never seen anything like it.

He chatted for 15 more minutes, looked at his watch and said he had to get ready for his date. I asked him if he'd met her using this method and he said, yep, he had. Unbelievable.

He left for his date, and I was left to ponder. Could Instant Messaging really have a productive use? I decided to give it a try myself, but not after until he came back from his date. I half expected him to come in and tell me she was a beast, or a transvestite or something weird. But nope, he came back (late) with a big grin on his face, proceeding to tell me how wild and crazy she was.

Damn.

I had to try this for myself. So, he sat down with me, showed me how to set up AOL Chat, told me how to find a chat room, then opened up a conversation with a woman, getting her picture in less than 2 minutes. She was hot. Then he stood up with a big grin and said, “she’s all yours champ, take it from here.”

So, I did. I opened a few chats with a few different women, and got several pictures within 2 minutes. It was surreal. I wasn’t brave enough back then to meet any of them in person, but I had fun chatting with them. I did it for about a week, then realized it was a big time waster, and stopped doing it.

In 2001 he got a new job, and we went our separate ways. I lost touch with him, spending my time focusing on my own businesses and projects. But I still wasn’t very good with women, even though I’d discovered that attraction was a learnable skill.

About that time internet dating really took off, and almost every dating site had a built in chat feature. You could look at a woman’s profile, see if she was online, and chat with her then and there. Match.com had a chat function (since disabled), Yahoo Messenger came into vogue, and AOL Instant Messenger was still going strong.

I got pretty good at writing online profiles, and started getting more serious about meeting women. It was a skill I really wanted to learn because I wasn’t very good at it back then. So, I decided to master internet dating.

I got several emails from women interested in my profile, but when I called them or met up with them, things weren’t very good. I was nervous, I couldn’t think, I didn’t know what to do or say, and the dates were not fun. What should I do to solve this?

Suddenly I remembered my friend’s strategy: IM chat. So, using what he taught me, I started chatting with women on dating sites. I’d email them on a dating site, and if I got a response I’d simply say, “Hey, you have Yahoo messenger, easier to chat on there?” Many did, or some other instant messenger programs. And a funny thing happened. The more I chatted, the better I was on the phone and in person. I thought of things to say faster, I kept the conversation going, and my mind was quicker.

Then it struck me. Instant Messenger was the perfect, no rejection training tool for learning the skills, and they rhythm of attraction. There was an unlimited supply of women to chat with. You could say anything you want, with no fear of personal rejection—if she didn’t like you, she just went away.

You could test sayings, conversational themes, and you could steer the conversation anyway you wanted. Not only that, you could talk to multiple women at the same time, training your brain to think quickly enough carry on two, three, even four conversations at the same time, all with different themes.

This was powerful stuff, and I realized it was the ultimate, no rejection way to “practice” attraction, a real world simulator. Even better, if you hit it off with a woman, you could meet her in person and take things from there, and I met a lot of them in person.

After awhile, I got so good at it, I quit doing it. Why? Because I had the confidence to meet women in the real world, the confidence to call a woman, the confidence to carry on a conversation because I knew what she was going to say. I’d already had the conversation a million times on Instant Messenger, so I knew what to do and what to say.

Instant Messenger was my “training wheels,” and it served me very well. And when I took the training wheels off, I didn’t fall down or stumble, I rode like a pro. It filled in the gap between theory and real world application, and it is the perfect attraction simulator, especially in this day and age.

Think about it. When my friend started with ICQ the internet was in its infancy. There wasn’t broadband, wasn’t social media, and the internet was still considered “weird.” Online dating was viewed as something only desperate people did, and way more men than women were on the internet. And yet, my friend still met two to three new women a week with it, using what we would consider antiquated technology.

Think about the internet today. Everyone has broadband, and can send huge files back and forth with ease. Everyone’s on Facebook. There’s Twitter. There’s Skype. Internet dating is considered perfectly normal and customary, with match.com and eHarmony spending huge amounts of money on tv advertising. And, Instant Messenger is more popular than ever.

You still have AOL Instant Messenger. You have Yahoo Messenger. You have Twitter. You have Skype. You have Facebook’s Instant Messenger. Plenty of Fish has an Instant Messenger. Instant Messenger is everywhere, and it’s the best way I’ve found to simulate attraction.

It used to be you’d open different chat windows using the same Instant Messenger. Now, you can literally chat on AOL Instant Messenger, Facebook, Yahoo, and Plenty of Fish all at the same time, with different women. I’ve done it, and it darn near gets overwhelming.

So, let’s talk about how you can create your own simulator system so you can learn the art and skill of attraction at a blistering rate.

First off, if you haven’t been through Secrets of Natural Attraction yet, I highly recommend you read it. Also, I highly recommend listening to the other four attraction acceleration systems so you can understand how women think, and how they make decisions about men.

In summary of those systems, women look for authority and intelligence in men. They are biologically programmed to feel attraction for men they know can protect them and produce superior offspring. When a woman is in the presence of a man with both of these characteristics, she feels what women call “chemistry.” If this feeling is present, women will do anything to be with a man, if it’s not, they will do anything to get away from him.

Male behavior creates the feeling of chemistry in women, and what you are doing in the simulator system is learning that behavior and getting immediate feedback from women. Your goal is to transmit authority and intelligence via what you type to the woman you’re chatting with, so she’ll feel chemistry for you.

What women look for in a man that tells them he’s intelligence is “quick thinking.” In other words, do you have a quick comeback for something she says, do you have a spin on words that makes her laugh, or a saying that activates her imagination. Most men don’t. They’re dull witted, slow and boring. You want to be fast and quick-witted. When you are, a woman pegs you as intelligent, and chemistry begins to form.

When you are starting out with Instant Messenger, you want to start with one woman and see how long you can keep the conversation going, what topics you can steer it to, what reactions you get from her and so on.

But here’s where it gets interesting, and I mean really interesting. As you get comfortable chatting with one woman, you’ll want to initiate a second chat with another, different woman and carry on two different conversations with two different women at the same time.

When you do this, something magical starts to happen. You start to think faster. You start to acquire the ability to “divide your mind” so you can carry on two totally different conversations at the same time.

When you master talking to two women, then move onto three, then to four. Four was usually the most I could handle, but I got up to five a few times. When you’re talking to this many women, the action is fast and furious. You have to fly from one conversation to another, responding quickly so each woman thinks you’re still engaged.

Your mind starts to work at a faster level. Soon, instead of thinking about what to say next, it’s on the tip of your tongue. Then you start coming up with multiple responses at the same time. Your mind works in parallel instead of sequential.

The more you do this, the more female “chat friends” you’ll acquire. Some of them will be sedate, some of them funny, some of them very naughty. You’ll know you are well on your way to mastering the skill of attraction when you can carry on four completely different conversations at once, with one being about the weather, one being about your day, one being funny comebacks, and one being naughty. When you can do that for an extended period of time, keeping all the women engaged and laughing, you are well on your way to mastering the art of talking to women.

You will soon start to notice something else, especially when you talk to a new woman: after awhile, all the conversations are the same. Sure there are specifics that pertain to each woman you're talking to, but for all intents and purposes the conversational "flow" is the same. You stop thinking consciously and start acting subconsciously. In fact, you know what she's going to say before she even says it, and your mind has several comebacks ready to go.

The more you do this, the more female friends you'll make online, and the more women you'll have to chat with. When you login, they will often initiate chats with you, because you are entertaining where most men are boring.

When you're chatting with all these women, experiment with different things. Push the envelope at times to see how they respond. Be a nice guy to one woman, a jerk to another, a lady's man to another, and so on. The ones you insult will go away. Now, your purpose is not to deliberately insult women, your purpose is to try new things so you can find your own attraction groove and style.

Your attraction groove and style is what you will take out into the real world with women, and you can find it using this simulator system. When you interact with women in the real world, you'll be much quicker with your wit than other men because you're used to talking to four at a time. One on one, women will seem slow to you, and you will seem fast to them. You will have trained your mind for quickness, something few other men will ever do.

Pretty exciting stuff, huh? I'm going to give you the best sites to use in a few minutes, but I do want to give you a word of warning, first. This simulator system can be powerful, but it can also be addictive. Remember what I said in the beginning about Instant Messenger being a great way to waste time? It is. You can blow hours a day on it if you're not careful.

You don't want to fall in the trap of chatting with women, and leaving it at that. Your purpose is to find your own attraction groove, and get good at responding to women. Your purpose is to train your mind to think quickly so you always have the right thing to say to the right woman at the right time in person because you know what she's going to say next.

How long will this take you? Three weeks from start to finish is sufficient. If you spend two (maybe three) hours a day, chatting with multiple women at the same time, you will be very, very good in three weeks. But after that, it's time to move on.

After three weeks are up, you want to start talking to these women on the phone. It's simple to do so—you just say, "hey, my fingers are sore from all this chatting, let's talk on the phone." She'll either say yes or no, and then you talk to her on the phone. Most will say yes.

Sadly, you can't talk to 4 women at the same time on the phone. But you can talk to three women back to back to back. Your goal is to now get comfortable talking on the phone to women, translating the skills you developed with instant message into real, live voice conversations. Yes, the first one or two will feel a little awkward, but after that, it becomes second nature. Then you've made the transition from chatting via instant messenger to talking to women who you know are interested in you (if they're not, they won't talk to you).

After you get comfortable talking on the phone with women, the next step is to simply meet them in person and continue the conversation there. You'll be a little nervous the first few times you do it, but after that it becomes second nature, and you're just as quick and witty in person as you are in online chat.

The trap you do NOT want to fall into is simply staying with Instant Message chat. There comes a time when you want to leave it behind, and only revisit it on occasion to keep your skills fresh. Don't get sucked into for months on end—you are using it for a purpose and that's to hone your newfound attraction skills in a very forgiving environment.

Ok, so where's the best place to start chatting online? www.plentyoffish.com is great because it's free, and there are a ton of women with profiles you can chat with. When a woman's online, the letter "instant message" appears under her picture, and you can start a conversation with her by simply referencing something in her profile. PlentyofFish (POF) doesn't have the best technology around, but if a woman will chat with you there, odds are she has Yahoo Messenger or AOL Instant Messenger.

Match.com used to have an IM function, but they removed it. But you can still email women, get responses from them, then simply say, "Hey, let's chat on Yahoo or AOL." Some will, some won't, but if you ask enough of them, soon you'll have more than you know what to do with.

Facebook is another great place to chat, because you're chatting with friends. Many times women will approve you as a friend if you know someone they do, and then you can initiate a chat based on what they say in their Facebook profile.

Keep in mind women are naturally chatty creatures. They love to chat, love to talk, love to gossip, and are happy to indulge you. If one doesn't want to talk, there are two others who will. Just keep asking.

Another place to initiate IM conversations is in chat rooms. If you go to Google and search on "dating chat rooms" you'll find all kinds of options. Some are weird, some are normal, but if you look around long enough, you'll find plenty.

Here's a trick my friend used to use many years ago to get a woman in a chat room to send over her pic. He'd instant message her and say, "G-rated pic attached-trade?" He'd usually get a response with a picture and then he'd start chatting.

One reason this works so well is because women constantly get pictures of men with their pants off. They are sick and tired of it, so when a woman sees "G-rated pic" she knows she's talking to a man who understands women don't like penis pictures. She appreciates it, puts you in a better category and is happy to chat with you.

There is one other use for Instant Messaging as a form of attraction simulation. If you ever feel like you're a bit rusty in the real world or the phone, "off your game," or you just want to try some far out angle you'd never use in the real world until it was tested, Instant Messenger is the best place to do so. Most of the women you'll never meet in real life, and they're just pixels on a screen.

So, put the simulator system to work, and watch your attraction skills increase dramatically in a very short period of time.

On with the fun,

-John Alanis
The King of Let 'em Come to You

PS One of the best all around resources I've ever put together is my Ultimate Unlimited Lifetime of Power and Success With Women System. In that system, we get into the deep psychological details of how women think, and how you can understand them better than any other man. When a woman knows you understand her at this level, she will do anything, and I mean anything to stay with you. You can check out all the amazing details at:

http://www.johnalanis.com/ultimate_system.htm